The topic: Life-span psychology holds relevance for all of us as we age, offering insights that spark reflection and dialogue. Please join us for a lively seminar that presents highlights of some of the most engaging concepts from this rich and compelling field, with emphasis on the ways these ideas can impact our personal and professional lives. This program integrates materials from the social sciences and the humanities and will include such topics as: Age-Reminders / Changing time-perspectives often encountered at mid-life / The impact of on-time and off-time life events / Bereavement Overload / The Village Movement and the notion of “aging in place”.

The Speaker: Gail S. Eisen, Ph.D. is a lecturer and consultant in social gerontology and the psychology of aging, with research and teaching experience in the field of life-span development and communications analysis. A former Fulbright Senior Scholar, she has taught at UCLA, the University of Michigan, California State University, and universities in Kenya, Bulgaria, Egypt, Israel, and India. She has presented psychology of aging and older workforce seminars for several Fortune 500 companies, non-profit organizations, national and international conferences, and regional counseling agencies.
